

Heros

We often hear stories of the courage of ordinary men and their triumphs against great odds. Our friends and brothers in the faith are heroes too. It is amazing that when we get to know most people, and hear what their lives have been like, we often see examples of great courage and find much to admire and respect. Whenever we are truly open to knowing the people around us, whether getting to know them personally, or at a meeting, we will see heroism.

As men, many of us become so involved in activities that we find little time for true relationships. One definition of an addiction is, "The thing that we substitute for relationships." When activities and things become more and more important to us, we literally become sick and captives to the bondage of busyness.